Uber delivery partners can now choose instant damage and theft protection for mobiles and bikes from INZMO

Uber delivery partners in France, Switzerland, and Belgium can now buy insurance protection from INZMO and quickly resume working even after their bike or mobile phone gets damaged or stolen. In March, Uber Eats conducted a national consultation of couriers and a large majority of them were looking for a protection solution against theft of their equipment. Uber Eats has partnered with the digital German-Estonian insurance agent INZMO to ensure that delivery partners can benefit from preferential rates for mobile phones and bicycle insurance and great digital user experience.

INZMO's end-to-end insurance solution allows insuring used objects via short video-verification assuring that the object is in good working condition. The delivery partners can later submit claims entirely online via INZMO's app or website.

INZMO not only offers advanced insurance products, but it also processes claims at record speed. Usually, it would take weeks if not months to reimburse a claim of a broken or stolen bike, INZMO does it in a few business days. Once the delivery partner acquires INZMO protection, if their mobile phone breaks, it will be conveniently picked up at their location and the swap/repair will only take 3-7 business days, if their bike is damaged, they can repair it at any repair shop and get a reimbursement within 3 business days.

"We aim to help our partners create more value to their clients with efficient and customer-friendly insurance products in every area of life," added Meeri Rebane, the co-founder of INZMO.

The delivery partner can choose to voluntarily subscribe directly via <https://sales.inzmo.com/uber/> and pay the insurance premium online. Prices for insuring a bike or a mobile phone start at less than 2 euros per month.
